▶ THE KITCHEN

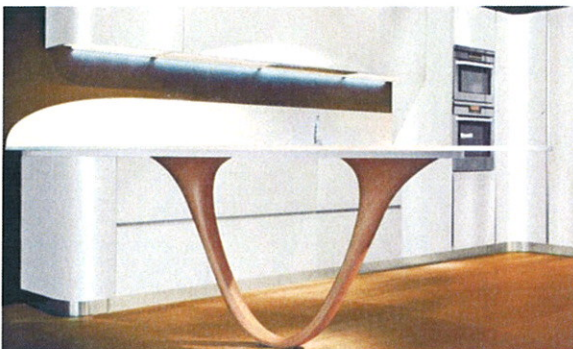

SCENE STEEL-ER Designer Jamie Bush in a stainless steel kitchen he created for a midcentury makeover.

KITCHEN AIDE

When giving a midcentury La Cañada spread a major interior facelift, decorator Jamie Bush crafted a kitchen that would reference the home's architectural roots while delivering a state-of-the-art culinary experience. His material of choice? Stainless steel. "It perfectly bridges the gap between something that's clean and contemporary, with a nod to stainless kitchens that were found in midcentury houses," says Bush, who used Bulthaup to create a clutter-free look. But Bush didn't just design the kitchen to look picture-perfect. He also created an open area where the home's residents could cook and commune simultaneously. "It's almost completely open to the living room, so they can hang out in different rooms and still enjoy the same space."

COUNTER CULTURE

Curves don't often wind their way into the kitchen, but Snaidero's latest, Ola 20, brings a new wave to culinary style. Starting with the counter base's highly sculptural curve, the swerves continue on upper cabinet "handles" and corner-less vertical edges. Who needs 90 degrees? Snaidero, 372 N.
